

Information Source Listing for WSDOT Surface Water Discipline Reports

Overview

The following is a source listing for information used to develop a Surface Water Discipline Report. The listing is organized by the following subject categories (column one): water quality, water quantity, aquatic biology, coastal environments, resource management, soils/geology, groundwater, hazardous waste/spill data, wetland, land use management, or land use/topography. Column two identifies the type of information that can be obtained for each subject category (i.e., maps, aerial photos, databases, digital geographic data (GIS), reports, or information contact). Column three identifies the name of the entity providing the information, and column four lists a contact number for the source, if available.

Additional References

The information listing provides a general overview of available data sources, and should not be considered inclusive of all resources potentially available for a major project. Discipline reports prepared for related areas of environmental impact should be reviewed to reduce duplication of data gathering and to ensure water quality issues are adequately addressed for project conditions.

Universities, colleges, and tribal environmental departments are also excellent sources of environmental data. Several sources included in this listing were obtained from a document entitled, Guidance for Conducting Water Quality Assessments and Watershed Characterizations Under the Nonpoint Rule (Chapter 400-12 WAC), published by Washington State Department of Ecology (Publication No. 95-307, February 1995), available from Ecology's Publications Distributions Office (360) 407-7472. Ecology's publication contains a more detailed description of several of these data sources, as well as additional information on water quality assessment methods.
